Squeaky Wheel

"For the Digital Age"

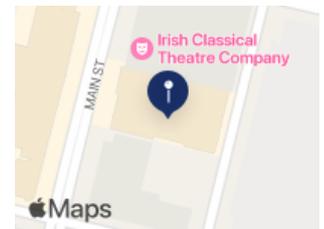

Established in 1985, Squeaky Wheel a.k.a the Buffalo Media Art Center is well-known by city dwellers as a media haven that aims to promote endeavors in the fields of journalism, film, information technology and digital art. The center offers rentals and production equipment along with workshops and education classes. There are also many video and animation camps for children and teenagers throughout the year which teaches everything about the 'Seventh Art'. Other events include screenings, animation workshops and film festivals of course.

North Park Theatre

"Part of the Dipson Theatres chain"

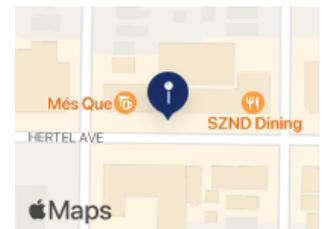

This single-screen theater, with both Art-Nouveau as well as Art-Deco motifs in its architecture is located in the North Park neighborhood. It opened in the 1920s as Shea's North Park Theatre and since then it has changed owners many times. Today, it showcases the talents of independent movie directors as well as a few blockbusters here-and-there.

Aurora Theater

"Historic Theater, Modern Fun"

This historic 650-seat theater, which was built in 1925, features first-run movies as well as live shows and special events. The theater has been renovated to resemble its original splendor, including refurbished mahogany doors with brass kick plates, murals on the walls, a large lobby area, and a new concession area with updated equipment. Groups of any size can also rent the theater for meetings, parties, and other special events. Your group can even bring your own movies to show on the big screen. If you need to do a presentation, there is a built-in display projector and sound system. -Christine A. Smyczynski
