Alice in a Labyrinth

"A Wonderland of Delectable Delights"

Everyone in Tokyo wants to escape their daily grind somehow, so why not do so at one of the city's many fantasy dining restaurants? Alice in Wonderland is the classic rabbit-hole tale, but with a Japanese spin - the waitresses are garbed in Alice-esque, gothic Lolita costumes. The fusion food is good, but visitors really come here for the décor and the atmosphere. Order your drinks from playing-card menus, and desserts from heart-shaped ones. Large clocks, mad hatters, and the lot permeate this place. Make reservations, and don't be late for this very important date!

Daily Chico

"Ice cream Skyscraper"

Tucked away in the basement of Tokyo's Otaku hangout, Nakano Broadway, Daily Chico has gained almost cult status for its unique 8-layer soft serve ice cream. The towering cone is piled with eight different flavors in colorful hues that make them fun to devour. If that is too daunting, you can opt for one of their delicious seasonal flavors that come in one-of-a-kind options like purple sweet potato, sesame, chai latte, green tea, and grape. For those craving something savory, the cafe also serves flavorful udon noodles in the store. Come discover a piece of Japanese pop culture and challenge yourself to the towering ice cream. Kids will definitely love this little spot too, making it great for a family outing.

Rainforest Cafe

"Go Native Eating in the Jungle!"

Tokyo's branch of Disney's Rainforest Cafe is well worth discovering, especially if you've got children, of any age. Descend into a world of exotic flora and fauna, where the cries and bleats of animatronic jungle animals mix with the vibrant colors of tropical fish for an otherworldly dining experience—and the food is pretty good too. At Rainforest Cafe, safari-clad servers whisk food and drink to and fro while monkeys hang from the ceiling. If that's not enough, check out their educational gift shop on the way out. While this could dent your pocketbook a bit, the Rainforest Cafe experience really is fun for the whole family, as well as the closest you may ever get to true jungle dining.
