Tivoli (Copenhagen)

"Historic Amusement Park"

Founded in 1843, Tivoli Gardens is a unique amusement park located where the once-fortified city's ramparts used to be. In fact, the on-site lake is a remnant of the city's moat. Known around the world for its infectious carnival-style atmosphere and exciting attractions, Tivoli Gardens combine the charm of the yesteryear with the dynamism of the future. The park spans a staggering 80,000 square meters (861112.8 square feet) of space in the heart of Copenhagen, making it one of the largest amusement parks in the country. Tivoli Gardens has great attractions like a historic rollercoaster, a mythical pirate ship, and magically lit carousels. There are around 40 bars and restaurants, some of which are gourmet and many date as far back as 1843. World-class live entertainment is always provided, and the festivities get kicked into high gear during the Christmas season.

Tycho Brahe Planetarium

"Copenhagen's Largest & Most Beautiful Planetarium"

In no time at all this modern building has become the new landmark of Copenhagen, and has contributed to the beauty of the city. It is situated just by Sankt Jørgens Sø. The building was erected during the late 1980s, financed by private means. Most importantly the building contains the huge omnimax cinema where films about nature and the universe are shown with computer-graphic and optical techniques, giving the spectator the feeling that he is actually walking by the river in the Grand Canyon or flying in the galaxies. At the planetarium you can also learn about the development of astronomy from the Middle Ages (when Tycho Brahe lived from 1546 to 1601) throughout modern day. The side of the planetarium that turns towards the lake has become a popular place for the people of Copenhagen to gather during the summer. Inside the planetarium there is an excellent restaurant called Cassiopeia.

Mads Nørgaard

"Men's Fashion"

Established in 1986, Danish designer Mads Nørgaard's eponymous boutique on Strøget has been dishing out some of the best fashion for men. Classic styles are as much a part of the designer's philosophies as modern ones and hence you'll find a harmonious blend of both in the store's ever-changing collection. Heavy on casual wear, the collection features creations by the designer as well as other labels like Paul Smith, Fred Perry and Stine Goya. There's a women's and children's line as well. Check website for more.

Brnenes Boghandel

"Best For Children"

Brnenes Boghandel means The Children's Bookshop, and that just about sums up this shop. It isn't just any place to buy books for children, though; you can be sure that the children will love you if you buy something for them here. This shop is rumoured to be the best in its field, and the shop is worth noticing. You will find anything you are looking for here. The selection is wide, with - of course - a special focus on the popular Danish children's writers like Ole Lund Kirkegård, Bjarne Reuter and Dennis Jürgensen. But there are also the old series like The Five. Astrid Lindgren has quite a large section on the shelves too. The expertise of the shop assistants is indisputable.

Cinemateket

"Varied Repertoire & Themes"

Cinemateket is in the heart of Copenhagen, between Kongens Nytorv and Nørreport Station, and is part of the Danish Film Institute. The architecturally interesting building contains two cinema theaters, a library, a videoteque, a bookshop and a café, all in a fashionable atmosphere. The repertoire varies with different themes each month; almost all genres are represented at some time throughout the year. Each film is screened twice or thrice a month, and the prices are relatively low per ticket. Some short flicks and children's films are free, but you normally have to order the tickets in advance. Cinemateket is the only cinema in Copenhagen with such a varied repertoire, and is an especially fun place to bring children on a rainy day.

National Gallery of Denmark

"Official Museum of Pictorial Arts"

This grandiose building was erected in 1889-96 after plans drawn by Wilhelm Dahlerup in Italian Renaissance style. In autumn 1998, an extension was opened that gave the National Gallery of Denmark the facelift it needed. The architects were Anna Maria Indrio. This deeply original new building was constructed in the park behind the original building and is connected to it by a glass-covered walkway, the so-called Street of Sculptures. The street stretches along the full length of the museum, and within it concerts and dance performances are held. The museum contains collections of art dating from the 12th Century. Among the older European and Danish collections, feast your eyes on paintings by Titian, Tintoretto, Breugel, Rubens, Frans Hals and Rembrandt. The modern collection comprises work by Picasso, Braque, Leger, Modigliani and Emil Nolde. Danish painters are richly represented, and you can enjoy the styles of Oluf Hst, Edward Weihe, Olaf Rude and Harald Giersing. Entrance to the permanent collections is free, but special exhibits require a modest entry fee.

Copenhagen Zoo (Københavns Zoo)

"It's a Wild World"

The Copenhagen Zoo is one of the largest zoological gardens in Europe. It was founded in 1859 by ornithologist N. Kjrbling, and was then a part of Frederiksberg Have. The landmark of the zoo is a 43-meter (142-foot) tall watchtower, and the zoo contains over 2500 animal and bird species from all over the world. The garden where the Children's Zoo is located is inhabited by animals like goats, cows and rabbits. Great work has been carried out to create natural surroundings for the animals that mimic their original habitat. In 1998, Christian Cold designed the new entrance, which is a piece of interesting modern architecture.

Zoological Museum

"Animal Kingdom"

Standing within the University of Copenhagen, the Zoological Museum is one of the four stellar museums under the Natural History Museum of Denmark. Exhibits at the museum trace the origin and evolution of life forms since the prehistoric ages. North Pole to South Pole; one of the museum's permanent exhibitions takes visitors through the changing variety of fauna and their development as the earth's climate zones change. Other interesting exhibits include specimens of extinct animals. The museum also offers visitors an opportunity to get up close with wild animals like fox cubs, hedgehogs and badgers. The on-site museum offers excellent souvenirs and toys.

Experimentarium

"Truly Magical"

Set in a renovated brewery that looks like a stack of boxes, Experimentarium's interior is also a fabulous architectural maze that will astound you just like its astonishing interactive displays. Opened in 1991, this science and technology repository closed for a few years for a major re-haul. One of the city's highlights, this place is for everyone who has a curious mind, be it a toddler or a grandparent. Get to know how soap bubbles are formed at the Bubblearium, or get awestruck at the massive DNA-shaped winding Helix copper stairway that connects to all the four levels of the museum. This sensational staircase makes this museum look like from a sci-fi movie. Take a peek into the world of micro-organisms at The Yeast Cell or find out about senses at The Tunnel of Senses. Want to get an idea, head to The Idea Company or the House of Inventions and for a dose of physics, Circus Physics is absolutely a must. With over 16 exhibition zones, there is something for everyone that will blow your mind away.

Dyrehavsbakken

"World's Oldest Amusement Park."

Bakken is one of the world's most popular and the oldest amusement park in the world. Similar to Tivoli, Bakken is located in the very scenic area of Dyrehaven. Back in the day, people visited Bakken to drink from the Kirsten Piils Spring in order to be cured by its waters. In 1830, the performers and entertainers arrived at Bakken and they have been there ever since. There is an outdoor stage where artists and performers entertain the audience. Best loved perhaps is the clown Pierrot, who performs at his little house several times a day. Pierrot jokes with the children and swallows fire. A visit to Bakken is often combined with a wonderful walk in the marvelous Dyrehaven. Entrance to the park is free, though the purchase of a wristband is necessary to get on the 33 rides in the park.
