Detroit Film Theatre

"Oasis in a Cinema Wasteland"

One of Detroit's unique cultural attractions is this popular historic theater at the Detroit Institute of Arts. A citywide chain of art house cinemas had all but closed in 1973 when film buff Elliot Wilhelm persuaded the DIA to let him screen foreign, offbeat and classic films. It's now one of the oldest and most respected film repertory series in the United States. Wilhelm, curator of film at the Institute of Arts since 1984, is still pleasing audiences with unusual, important and distinguished films. And there are still no competitors anywhere near downtown Detroit showing this type of fare.

The Magic Bag

"Music and Movies"

Housed in an art-house movie theater, The Magic Bag features an eclectic mix of musical acts ranging from nationally known performers like Rickie Lee Jones and B. B. King, to emerging alternative rock groups. No frills but ample elbow room as you check out the latest music or watch a movie. The View n' Brew nights are quite popular, offering patrons the chance to sit back and enjoy a newly released film with a cold beer or glass of wine.

Redford Theatre

"Detroit's Other Movie Palace"

Established in 1928, the lavish, 1571-seat Redford Theatre has been delighting audiences ever since. Every evening at 8p, there are screenings of classic movies too. The film is preceded by an organ concert from the original organ that was put in to accompany the silent films shown when the theater was first opened. A classic Warner Brothers cartoon is also often shown before the main feature.
