The Bridge

"Dining by the River"

Located on the top deck at The Floatel, The Bridge is a multi-cuisine restaurant serving interesting preparations from the Colonial, Anglo-Indian and Bengali cuisines. 'Baked Fish Patricia Memsaab' and 'Chicken Country Captain' are just few of the interesting names on the menu. While ordering from the a la carte menu is always fun, if you want it simple, you can always opt for the lunch buffet. The most interesting way to dine here is out on the large patio, where the open sky above and the Hooghly River under create a different ambiance of their own. If you still feel something missing, the fully equipped bar should help.

Mezza

"A Mediterranean Platter"

A cozy little eatery situated in the same premises as the nightclub Soho, Mezza offers Mediterranean flavors. Serving a number of specialties from the region as well as a few Continental preparations, this restaurant is all about pleasing the palate. The name itself is an East Mediterranean term given to an 'assortment of appetizers', so the starters here are definitely off the charts. In fact, starters and drinks just before starting the party at Soho is a combination that is quite popular with the locals. However, if you're visiting after the party, the main course options are equally good too. The interiors, done in mild hues like white and orange, compliment the ambiance and the cuisine offered.
