National Theatre Munich

"Munich's Premier Opera House"

Karl von Fischer erected this classical building in 1818. Today the National Theatre Munich stands tall in marble, crystal and gold, hosting live performances of international artists. The theater is well planned and has a Corinthian portico dedicated to Apollo and the Muses. There is also a mosaic of Pegasus on the rear tympanum, designed by Ludwig Schwantehaler. The building has been destroyed twice: once by fire in 1825 (it was rebuilt two years later in a style faithful to the original) and again in a 1943 air raid. It was rebuilt in 1963 according to the original plans. The Bavarian State Opera, one of the world's best, showcases its events here and the Munich Opera Festival attracts many enthusiasts from around the world every year.

Schauspielhaus

"Historical Theater"

The Schauspielhaus is the major stage and theater of the Munich Kammerspiele and probably one of Germany's remaining well maintained Art Nouveau theaters. Built in the beginning of 1900 by architects Richard Riemer Smith and Max Littmann, the theater was restored between 2000 to 2003. You will only find German theater here and if you know the language you will thoroughly enjoy the shows, of which quite a few are award winning plays.

Münchner Marionettentheater

"Fairy Tales & Puppetry"

Munich's first puppet theater was founded in 1858 by Josef Leonhard Schmid and the Count of Poggi. Architect Theodor Fischer was commissioned to build a new theater in 1900, and the result was the first-ever theater dedicated to puppets. It is just as impressive today as it was a hundred years ago, and continues to draw in punters young and old who come to laugh at Kasperle (the German equivalent of Punch and Judy) and listen to fairy tales from around the world.

Münchner Volkstheater

"Theater For All"

In this instance, Volkstheater doesn't mean a traditional, rural theater particular to Bavaria, but rather, one that specializes in classical, contemporary dramas and comedies that are portrayed in a popular and accessible way. Among the 20th Century authors featured on the stage here, are many famous names, such as Bertolt Brecht and Ödön von Horváth. The theater is also home to a smaller venue known as the Nachtkastl.

Prinzregententheater

"Munich's Most Beautiful Theater"

Reopened in 1997, this is the finest of Munich's opera houses and host to ballets, orchestras, operas, and operettas from all over the world. Classical in style, it was built in 1901 by Max Littmann. The auditorium is designed like an amphitheater with no seat categories, according to the supposedly democratic ideals of Wagnerian opera. The building is also home to the Bavarian Theater Academy, whose students use both stages for public performances.
