Berluti

"A Gentlemen's Bootmaker"

Olga Berluti believes her shoes have a soul. Yes, a soul, not just a sole. The Duke of Windsor, Warhol, Sinatra and countless others seem to have agreed, and still do. Founded in 1895 by an Italian cobbler named Alessandro Berluti, his descendants have continued the family tradition of exceptional bootmaking – with a Parisian flair. Each ready-to-wear shoe is unique and inimitable, the client choosing the patina applied to his own pair in the Paris Atelier. Should you have the inclination, bespoke is offered by appointment with the house Master Bootmaker. But be warned, perfection is addictive.

Mario Raspini

"Shoe Heaven!"

No matter how chic your outfit may be, it can never be complete without the right pair of shoes, and that is where Mario Raspini comes in. The shoes at this store, which is situated along the Avenue des Champs-Élysées, are works of art in themselves, and each pair is elaborately crafted. The collection on offer, for both men and women, is rather vast, but if you still can't find that perfect pair, you have the option of ordering a customized pair.
