Churchill's - The English Pub

"Night at the Local Pub"

The quintessential English pub, Churchill's is the place where weary British travelers head when they miss their home country. The place has a large collection of draught beers, as well as a collection of wines and whiskeys. The restaurant's menu is not entirely British though, and also includes appetizers and main course dishes from other cuisines. Patrons can also enjoy live music by upcoming artists, apart from watching sports on large televisions.

La Bécasse

"A Popular Place with Tourists"

Hidden in a narrow street between Place de la Monnaie and Bourse, La Bécasse is one of the nicer tourist bars. Business started in 1877, and the interior hasn't changed since. With its wooden chairs, tables and benches, it is actually quite cozy and always crowded. Tourists come here for "traditional Brussels beer" (lambic and gueuze) but it is also populated by loyal crowds of locals. For a business like this, prices are not unfriendly and the sandwiches are extremely tasty.
