Nürnberg Hof

"Medieval Inn"

The Nürnberg Hof, which was built in around 1410, offered visiting merchants a place to store and sell their wares. From the 16th Century onwards it was used as an inn, where the emperor Frederick III and his son Maximilian I were reputed to have stayed. In 1905, however, the building fell victim to reconstruction work which was being carried out at the time. Only the south corridor remains in its original state. The vaults containing old coats of arms are worth seeing. A Gothic door with ornamental ironwork can still be found in the west wing.

Rententurm

"Tower of Defence & Poets."

Rententurm, a tower on Frankfurt's most important shipping trade square, which was built between 1455 and 1456, has earned the recognition of officials and the harbor. It belonged to the late Gothic town defense system. The square, four-story building came equipped with a pointed roof and an oriole tower. In the 19th Century, the tower lost around 4 meters (13.12 feet) in height due to the expansion of the river Main. On the Main side of the river you can see the remains of a two-headed imperial eagle, and further down still, water depth marks. The Expressionist poet and dramatist Fritz von Unruh lived here before the First World War.

Staufenmauer

"Medieval City Walls"

The Medieval city walls from the 12th Century comprise a deep moat, high outer walls and gates. The 6-8 meters (19.6- 26.2 feet) high city wall was further strengthened by archers' bow windows at the top. After the expansion of the town in the 14th Century, the Jewish population settled in the eastern part of Frankfurt, behind the walls. Today, the remains of the defenses can be viewed near the Zeil, where Töngesgasse and Fahrgasse meet. The route of the wall can still be observed in Frankfurt's road system today.

Rothschild Park

"In the Shadows of Trees & Skyscrapers"

The first people to settle on this piece of land in the middle of Bornheim were the Romans. Several centuries later, a castle was built on top of the ruins, although this was later turned into a farm. The land was bought by the Rothschild family, a wealthy family of bankers. In the 19th Century, they began to erect a palace on the grounds. The palace didn't survive the next century of turmoil, but the lovely tree-lined park did. A favorite haunt for families with children, the park now contains a fountain with plunge pool.

"Beautiful Museums And Flea Market"

One of the important districts of the city, dating back to the 12th Century, Sachsenhausen is sure a must-visit! Comprising of the River Main, this area is known for some of Germany's best museums and the flea market, which is the largest in the city. The many bars and pubs serving exquisite apple-wine here is a must-visit for connoisseurs of wine. There are plenty of bargains to be found here: second-hand clothes, household appliances, CDs and antique furniture are sold at hundreds of stalls. And with a bit of luck you may be able to find a genuine rarity, but it may well take a long time. But even if you don't, it's great fun to just rummage about on a Saturday morning. Frankfurt Zoo

"Adorable Critters"

Frankfurt Zoo was established in 1858 and is one of the oldest in Germany. The zoo is linked closely with the name of the famous animal expert and researcher Bernhard Grzimek. After the World War II, it was Dr. Grzimek who took care of rebuilding the wrecked buildings. After being appointed as the zoo's director, he also took care of purchasing animals, new buildings and modern enclosures. The special attractions today are the tigers, lions and leopards, the snakes and spiders, and the so-called day and night house which simulates the night-time-so that visitors can see what animals get up to after dark. The 11 hectare (27.18 acre) zoo now boasts over 600 different species and a total of 5,000 animals.

Struwwelpeter Museum

"All About Struwwelpeter"

Heinrich-Hoffmann-Museum, also known as the Struwwelpeter Museum, documents the life and work of Dr. Heinrich Hoffmann, who authored the popular children's book, Struwwelpeter ('Shock-headed Peter'). Hoffmann was also the director of a local mental asylum and spoke out against the (often brutal) treatment of the mentally ill in 19th-century Germany. The centerpiece of the museum, however, is Struwwelpeter, with a host of exhibits including rare copies, exotic translations and parodies of the 150-year-old bestseller. Special exhibitions examine different aspects of Hoffmann's life and literature. Check website for more details.

Bockenheimer Warte

"Bockenheim's Watchtower"

The Bockenheim watchtower is the only one of Frankfurt's Medieval towers without a fortified courtyard and water system. Constructed in 1434-35, the building acted as the lookout tower along the road that leads to Cologne. The Gothic tower, which was built in a cylindrical form, has a pyramid shaped roof and battlements. The half-timbered guard house is octagonal in shape and was accessible only by retractable steps. If need be, a large number of defenders could take cover in the room. There is a market at the foot of the tower once a week.

Darmstadt-Kranichstein Railway Museum

"Locomotives etc."

The largest railway museum in the German state of Hesse, The Darmstadt-Kranichstein Railway Museum was originally a railway depot in Darmstadt. The museum displays an impressive collection of locomotives from different regions, including Turkey and Australia, among other places. The museum also exhibits turntables, coal bunkers and several other railway vehicles. The museum has its own ticketing printing press as well. There are train services that are operating between Darmstadt Ost and Bessunger Forst. Having other exhibits to help in the technical understanding of railway equipment, this museum is a must-visit for those who love trains and train equipment.

Opel Live

"The World of (Opel) Cars"

Opel is to Rüsselsheim what Ford is to Detroit. And if you want to know how a car is made, then this is the place to come. Visitors glide around the factory on a conveyor belt and watch all the different stages of production. A new feature is the virtual reality section, where visitors can take part in crash tests, simulations and speed checks. A great day out for kids and adults alike. Call for group visiting hours.
