Continental Club

"Roots Rock & Elvis Tributes"

This venue, south of the river, is a throwback to the 1950s. Roots rock and country reign supreme in this bar, where one can often find men in leather jackets and classic Cadillacs out front. With live music nightly, tributes to Elvis, and celebrations of Hank William's birthday, this place is great for dancing, drinking and kicking back on the high stools. Happy hours feature some of Austin's favorite songwriters. The venue has broadened its range of live music to include occasional indie rock.

Hole in the Wall

"Cozy Dive with Live Music"

With its unassuming little stage having hosted big names over the decades, Hole in the Wall has a longstanding reputation as the city's most storied venues. Today, it is mostly a launching pad for local up-and-comers ranging in number and genre, from 9-piece bluegrass bands to individual singer-songwriters. Although the nature of the crowd itself varies by similarly sudden shifts in performing schedules, the bar's proximity to UT brings in a steady flow of students and associated youngsters, most of whom come in for pitchers of Shiner and Lone Star. This place has won high praise as the place to be for live music! The staff are great and the locals are friendly.
