Little Bangkok Thai & Chinese Cuisine

"Bang for Your Buck"

For some of the best Thai food in the city, look no further than this inconspicuous restaurant housed in a tiny strip shopping center. On the outside, Little Bangkok may look like nothing special. However, inside you'll find a cozy interior packed with loyal patrons. The restaurant offers both a Thai and Chinese menu, but Thai is certainly the specialty here. Standouts include avocado shrimp and pad kee mao, an authentic spicy noodle dish. One of the best things about Little Bangkok is that all of their dishes are pretty affordable. Amazing food at a great value is what keeps people coming back. Arrive early or late, especially on the weekends, as there is often a wait.

Chinese Dhaba

"Indo-Chinese Treats"

Reminiscent of roadside restaurants that is found in the Asian sub-continent, Chinese Dhaba is a unique blend of Indo-Chinese cuisine that is so unlike traditional Chinese food. An amalgamation of Indian spices and herbs is used to flavor the Chinese dishes resulting in creations like chicken lollipop, chicken 65 and Chinese bhel. This fusion fare served here is spicy and packed with flavor, and is very affordable. End your meal with the kulfi - a delicious Indian ice cream. Visit Chinese Dhaba for if you are looking for something different.

Chong Qing Hot Pot

"Delicious Szechuan Fare"

Tucked in the Atlanta Chinatown Mall's food court, Chong Qing Hot Pot is known for its Szechuan cuisine. The traditional menu is prepared by native cooks from Szechuan Province and lend an authenticity that is packed with flavor. The portions are generous and the price way too reasonable to make your wallets smile. From vegans to meat eaters, there is something for everyone in this small eatery. Bring cash as credit cards are not accepted here.
