Jack's Bar-B-Que

"Tennessee Tradition"

Having started in the food industry at an early age, Jack Cawthon found there was an absence of good barbecue in Nashville. Now known as the king of barbecue, Jack's solid foundation of slow-smoked pork shoulder, beef brisket and award winning sauces has helped build his tasty empire. The downtown location is perfectly situated in the heart of Nashville's main music attractions like the Ryman Auditorium, Tootsies, and Ernest Tubb Record Shop. Look for the three flying pigs sign and get ready to dig into some of the best barbecue Nashville has to offer.

Prince's Hot Chicken Shack

"Hot & Spicy Chicken"

Forget about fast food chicken sandwiches that claim to be spicy, this is the real thing. Four levels of heat are available—mild, which is frightfully spicy in its own right; medium, which will make you grimace in painful bliss; hot, which is seriously life threatening; extra hot—don't try this unless you have medical personnel nearby. Sandwiches are served with pickle spears and beans or slaw. Vending machines provide carbonated refreshment.

Korea House

"Truly Korean Cuisine"

At Korea House, delicious side dishes and Korean barbecue are among the top choices for many guests. The staff is very friendly and eager to see you enjoy your Korean food experience. If you are new to Korean food you might want to try ordering a variety of side dishes to share among your table. If you are looking for amazing ambience, this might not be your best bet, but if you want tasty and authentic Korean food at a spot favored by Korean locals, then Korea House should be your first stop in Nashville.
