Sakura Hotel

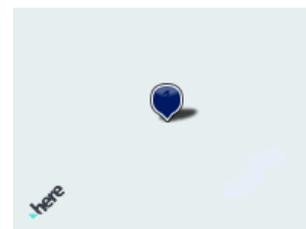

"Tokyo's Book District Accommodations"

Clean and comfortable accommodations in the heart of Tokyo's Jimbocho book district are provided by the Sakura Hotel. The bilingual staff is friendly and helpful and the front desk is open around the clock. All the rooms are either singles, or doubles and quadruples with bunk beds. The clientèle is very mixed, from students to company reps to budget overseas travelers. Many return time and time again.

Hilltop Hotel (Yamanoue Hotel)

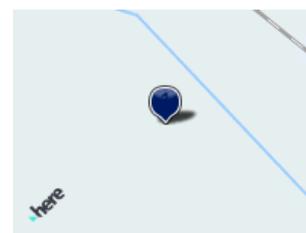

"Dignity, Tradition & Hospitality"

Overlooking Meiji University, the Yamanoue Hotel, also known as the Hilltop Hotel, has a proud history of hospitality stretching back to the 1930s. It was one of the favorite haunts of author Yukio Mishima. Today, the hotel's art-deco furnishings and spacious rooms still attract a cultured clientèle. The elegant charm of the hotel is especially suited to romantic getaways or a honeymoon stay.

Asia Center of Japan

"For Budget Travelers"

This is a decidedly spartan hotel, which has been offering rooms with or without bath for budget travelers since the early 1970s. Rates depend upon the floor space and size of the bed. The clientele is mostly students, tourists and short-stay business visitors, who find the Center unpretentious and very hospitable. English is spoken, as are several Asian languages. There is a modest restaurant, bar and snack lounge. During summer the central terrace becomes a beer garden. Small conferences may be held in the two meeting rooms. Inexpensive cafeteria-style meals and limited parking are available to guests.

Keio Plaza Hotel Tokyo

"Shinjuku's Original International Hotel"

Once the tallest hotel in Japan, the Keio Plaza has been a centerpiece Tokyo hotel since the early 1970s. Additions in the 1980s allowed it to compete with the spate of newer hotels going up in the district. Today it boasts a vast array of rooms in both traditional Japanese-style as well as Western-style configuration. Those on the west side have an excellent view of the futuristic-looking Tokyo government office buildings.

Shinjuku Washington Hotel

"Upmarket Urban Hotel"

The porthole-style windows of this business hotel look out on some of Tokyo's most breathtaking scenery. Rooms on the upper floors are always in high demand. The hotel itself is somewhat upmarket, but provides good value with its well-equipped, space-saving accommodation. Check-in is facilitated by automatic key-vending machines on the third-floor lobby. The convenience to shopping in the nearby electronics district makes this hotel a popular choice.

Daiichi Inn Ikebukuro

"A Local Business Hotel"

Located in the Ikebukuro shopping and entertainment district, the Daiichi Inn offers business travelers hospitable, clean and inexpensive lodgings. The network of train lines and subways nearby makes for easy access to central Tokyo and prefectures to the north and west of Tokyo. Only Western-style rooms are available, which are a bit old-fashioned in decor and furnishings, but all come with private bath and basic facilities.
