Suntory Hall

"Concert Hall With Great Acoustics"

Suntory Hall is one of Tokyo's best concert venues for classical music. It harbors two concert halls: the Main Hall with a capacity of 2006 and the Blue Rose Hall with a capacity of 432. The larger hall mainly features orchestral concerts and pipe organ recitals, while the smaller hall offers a wide range of different classical genres, including popular children's concerts. Wines, cocktails and coffee are available at the Bar Intermezzo before each concert and during intermission. The concert halls give the impression of opulence with great, ambient lighting and the stage right in the middle, with the seating arranged in a semi-circle on different levels. So, definitely go for a show here, it is well worth the price.

Tokyo Dome

"The Big Egg"

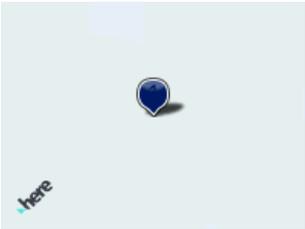

The Tokyo Dome is an architectural marvel located in the heart of Tokyo. The dome resembles a huge egg externally, and is air-supported internally by a pressure fan that maintains air pressure to keep the dome elevated. It is home to the Yomiuri Giants baseball team, and plays host to baseball games throughout the year. The dome also holds the distinction of being the biggest concert venue in Japan. International superstars such as Madonna, Michael Jackson, and the Backstreet Boys have performed at the venue. Located close by is the Tokyo Dome Hotel, containing an amusement park, restaurants and cafes, and the Baseball Hall of Fame and Museum. This place is a one-stop entertainment phenomenon!

Club 333

"Music with a View"

Club 333 in the Tokyo Tower is the perfect place to watch the sun set over the city before a big night out on the town. Live jazz, R&B or bossa nova is played throughout the observatory area, so visitors can choose to watch the performers or enjoy the stunning view of the glittering Tokyo skyline visible from the large windows. Entry to the club is included in the observatory fee. All in all, this is a great place to unwind with loved ones.

Studio Coast

"Multipurpose Hall"

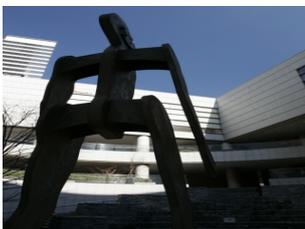

Studio Coast is also recognized as Ageha. A modern-designed house, it hosts live shows of international artists from outside Japan and has more than 3500 seats, separated on two floors. Being the nation's first octagonal shaped hall, its acoustical design aims to produce the best quality of sound and light during live performances. The complex features the main hall, various bars, lobby, as well as an outdoor pool on the balcony. The studio is a good 15-minute walk from Shin-Kiba station on Yurakucho Line or there is a free bus that comes every half an hour along the Roppongi-dori from Shibuya station route.

Tokyo Opera City

"Premiere Concert Complex"

Tokyo Opera City is a state of the art concert hall with excellent acoustics but, despite its name, doesn't stage operas. Nevertheless, it puts on an innovative and varied concert program ranging from solo recitals to full orchestral concerts. It has a seating capacity of 1632. Inside the hall there is a wine bar serving drinks and snacks. For a full meal, however, visitors can take the elevator to the 53rd or 54th floors where there is a selection of eateries - and the view is stunning. The Opera City also houses a gallery that holds art exhibitions four times a year. Its objective is to preserve and present authentic Japanese culture amidst Tokyo's metropolitan atmosphere.
