Fire House

"Delectable Burgers and More"

Fire House is one of the go-to places in Tokyo if you are craving some hearty burgers. With the board outside the restaurant tempting passers-by with listings of sandwiches, burgers and coffee, the fast food place definitely comes up to the mark on all three. However, it is mainly the burger list which draws in most diners. Along with delicious patties, the burgers come with a variety of toppings including cheese, eggs, bacon and chili. The ambiance here is surprisingly cozy for a fast food place, with wood floors and furniture, pictures on the walls and a bookshelf filled with interesting titles and nick-nacks. All in all, this is a great place to catch up with a friend or even go for a dinner date.

Burger Mania

"Burgers off the Beaten Path"

Burger Mania is truly a find, even though its location is somewhat strange. About a 10-minute walk from the nearest station, Burger Mania doesn't jump out at you, but rather sits and waits for you to find it. Reminiscent of the cool, sidewalk cafes of New York or Montreal, this joint is chill, cozy, and best of all, serves up some really good burgers. But that's not all that's on the menu. With a variety of sandwiches, salads, desserts and quite a full bar, you could spend the whole night here without any problems. Offering a very cozy outdoor terrace as well as a delivery service, sometimes those hard-to-find places end up being the best finds of all.

Baker Bounce

"Hearty Burger Delights"

Baker Bounce is a diner with a simple homey ambiance and an impressive list of burgers. Although the restaurant does serve a variety of authentic American preparations like steaks and sandwiches, it is the burgers which are the main draw for the people. Sink your teeth into their delicious hamburgers or bacon burgers with a side of coleslaw or fries. If you are a more experimental eater, their Ratatouille burgers are definitely something you should try out. The decor at the diner is very American-inspired and gives the place a homey vibe. All in all, this is a great spot for a quick family meal.
