Serpentine Lido

"Wild Swimming In Hyde Park"

In most of London's parks, diving into a water feature would be heavily frowned upon, but not at Hyde Park's wonderful Serpentine Lido. On the south side of this beautiful sweep of water, near the Lido Café and serene Diana Memorial Fountain, the wise folk who run the park have sectioned off a large square for urbanites and visitors alike to get back to nature and swim in wild water. On dingy grey days, swimmers are outnumbered by monochrome Canada geese, but it does get busy when the sun shines. They have a sunbathing area on a tiled terrace, changing rooms and a child safe paddling pool.

London Waterbus Company

"Cruising Along the Canal"

The London Waterbus Company operates cruises along the Regent's Canal, to and from Camden Lock Market, Little Venice and London Zoo. These narrow boats are fashioned from converted cargo barges, and are oddly charming in their simplicity. Unlike most sightseeing cruises, a trip aboard the London Waterbus allows you to take in and appreciate the sights without the unnecessary chatter of an over-enthusiastic guide to disturb you. Although, if you do have any questions, the staff on board will be happy to share what they know. The cruise operates on an hourly basis from 10a to 5p, from April through September, and tickets are sold on board. Guided day trips are offered on Fridays, upon reservation.
