Avenue Louise

"La terra della seta e dei soldi"

Il quartiere più esclusivo di Bruxelles per quanto riguarda lo shopping, offre una vasta gamma di negozi di moda esclusivi su Boulevard de Waterloo, tra Chaussée D'Ixelle e Avenue Louise, e lungo la stessa Avenue Louise. Passeggiando per questo quartiere noterete un cambio radicale nel modo di vestire e di comportarsi della gente. Al posto dei jeans troverete i completi di Hugo Boss, invece di scarpe da ginnastica sandali Gucci. Durante l'estate queste due strade diventano delle passerelle. Qui è dove l'aristocrazia Belga passa il suo tempo, i potenti uomini d'affari alloggiano in uno dei tanto alberghi di lusso, e dove annoiate donne ricche riempiono il loro guardaroba. Cartier, Armani, Chanel sono solo alcuni dei nomi presenti. Benvenuti nell'equivalente Belga di 5th Avenue a NY, Rue Faubourg a Parigi o Knightsbridge a Londra. Ricordatevi la carta di credito.

Rue Neuve

"Hightail it to Brussels' High Street"

Rue Neuve is a narrow shopping avenue that is jam-packed with top notch shops like Morgan, Esprit, H&M and Mango. On weekends, this is hardly the place to window shop, as the boisterous crowd of fashionistas and casual shoppers alike pack together for an afternoon of perusing. If you're planning on doing some serious shopping, visit Monday through Friday, when the selection is a little less picked over and the shopkeepers can give you personalized attention.

Rue Antoine Dansaert

"Fashionistas Have Found a Home"

Rue Antoine Dansaert lies between Boulevard Du Nieuport and Rue Van Artevelde. At first glance, this neighborhood doesn't look like much, but that's precisely the point. Like Soho or Nolita in New York City, this is precisely the type of environment that becomes a breeding ground for a city's avant-garde art and fashion scene. This is where one finds the latest creations from Belgium's fashion elite: Dirk Bikkembergs, Dries Van Noten, Ann Demeulemeester, Raf Simons and others. Hip, affordable shoe stores also line the street, and some side streets provide wonderfully innovative products for home design. Dansaert is the downtown hotspot for fashionistas.
