Mi Amor

"A Fairy Tale Boutique"

Always mentioned in conjunction with a similar store, Sic Amore, Mi Amore sells costume jewelry, gifts, scarves, gloves and hats created by different artists and fashion designers. The store is literally packed with original, innovative collections: an alternative colorful fashion made of a mixture of wool, velvet and silk combined with feathers, sequins, pearls, glass or galalith beads. Beautiful scarves made of petals of shot silk are on display next to a large choice of costume jewels shaped as dragonflies or necklaces of waxed paper flowers. For the cold season fleece hats with flowers and scarves originally cut and shaped as ruches, flames, strips and plaits.

Boutique Vanessa Tugendhaft

"Parisian Chic"

The young and effervescent Vanessa Tugendhaft's namesake jewelry line has etched an intricate mark in the fashion industry. The exquisite selection of finely cut diamonds and one-of-a-kind designs add the right amount of glitz and glamor to just about any outfit. The Idylle collection of rose pendants and botanic-inspired pieces spell passion and romance, while the Marquise with its mask bracelets and necklaces gives off a mysterious vibe. Each piece is elegant, enchanting, classy, yet affordable, and make for great gifts and conversation starters.

Chaumet

"Royal Jewels"

With clients comprising royal families and French aristocrats, this jewelry store is not for everyone. If you have a healthy bank account however, then by all means, drop by. This is one of the most prestigious and historical jewelry stores in Paris. Established in 1780, the store's founder was originally Napoléon's official jeweler. The creations are exquisite, from watches to delicate rings and innovatively designed pendants. Of special note is one of the collections named the Frise, made up of finely scattered diamonds placed in white and yellow gold. There are other delightful collections to choose from, and the skillful craftsmen can even custom-make jewelry for you.

Maison Goyard

"Luxe Bags"

The trunk movement was pioneered by Pierre-François Martin in 1792 under the name House of Martin. After a string of successors, the brand was revolutionized by Edmond Goyard in 1885. Today the reputed bag makers pride themselves on an international client base with stores across the globe. Specializing in travel accessories, the luxurious collection features trunks, trolleys, handbags, briefcases as well as pet carriers. Customized and handmade like they did back when it all began, classic designs are entwined with steep heritage at their cutting-edge workshops.

Tumi

"Luggage Movement"

The founder of Tumi, inspired by Peruvian culture during his volunteer service visit to South America, christened his venture after an ancient God of the same name. Established in 1975, the brand represents an unrivaled repertoire of luxury travel accessories. Their three-fold philosophy to combine cutting-edge design, top quality and unrivaled functionality rests on innovation. Having introduced travelers to nylon bags in the 1980s and breakthrough wheeled luggage a decade later, they have been at the forefront of travel revolution. The inventive merchandise features backpacks, briefcases, electronic gadget covers for laptops and mobiles, and stylish everyday bags. Personalize your luggage by taking home a monogram suitcase.

Harry Winston

"Exquisite Diamonds"

Royalty, business tycoons and movie stars all come here to splurge on jewelry and timepieces. The late Harry Winston, a native New Yorker, is still known as 'The King of Diamonds', and the business empire he founded has an international reputation. High profile celebrities are known to "borrow" designs when they attend the Oscars each year, and even the Metropolitan Museum of Art and the Louvre have displayed Winston's exclusively crafted works. The stores, or "salons" as they are called, maintain a high profile, and this one in Paris is no exception. You can expect impeccable service, and to be set back by several thousand dollars if you decide to secure one of the exquisite pieces on offer.
