Wahaca Covent Garden

"Fun, Funky Taqueria"

Created by Thomasina Miers, a winner of the BBC's Masterchef series, Wahaca purports to serve real, authentic Mexican street food to hungry Londoners, and it delivers. The interior decor is fresh and funky, with bright, vibrant colors and lots of light. Often crowded and loud, Wahaca isn't for the sophisticated, but for food-lovers who look for inexpensive prices. The fun atmosphere for leisure dining sets the perfect ambiance for families, twenty-somethings, or anybody else on the go. Call ahead for more details.

Daddy Donkey

"Mexican Street Food in London"

In Spanish, Burrito means a small donkey. This venue specializes in making huge burritos, self-proclaiming themselves as the 'Big Daddy of Burritos', hence the name Daddy Donkey. It is a stall in the Leather Lane Market of Camden that serves fine Mexican fast food consisting of tacos, fajitas, burritos with a selection of fillings and salsa. The hearty fillings comprising beef, steak, pork and guacamole further enrich their flavor and texture. The stall is crowded most of the time, though the service is quick. Payment is taken through cash only. Do check out this place to discover the taste of London's street food.

Mestizo Restaurant & Tequila Bar

"Elegant Mexican-European Nouveau Cuisine"

Mestizo is the Mexican word used to describe people who are descendants of Mexican and Spanish bloodlines. Essentially it means fusion, thus Mexican and European flavors are superbly represented here in an exotic blend of delicious cuisine. The decor is as rich and stylish as the food, with the sultry red walls offset by glamorous chandeliers and subtle lighting that makes for a calm and elegant ambiance. Dishes are presented with artistic flair and though it may appear that the food on your plate is sparse, meals are deceptively filling though people with giant appetites may not agree. Impressive as the food might be, it's the tequilas served here that have the biggest fan following. You haven't really enjoyed yourself if you haven't tried one of the succint mezcals or tequilas served here.
