Heaven

"A Heavenly Gay Nightclub"

Belinda Carlisle knew what she was on about when she sang "Heaven is a place on earth" - it's right next to Charing Cross tube, and it's probably London's best-known gay club. As with most popular gay venues, large crowds of straight tourists abound. Heaven has tried to curb this by designating different nights as straight, gay or mixed, but it hasn't really worked. Not that it matters at all, because Heaven is still a blissful venue which puts on a huge variety of club nights. The lounge upstairs provides a bit of friendly chill-out to a golden oldies atmosphere and you can actually talk in here without shouting. It all makes for an interesting and entertaining clubbing experience.

Koko

"A Lively Music Venue"

Koko is one of London's largest club venues which is quite popular with the students and the local crowds. A wide variety of music is featured here, from disco and funk to handbag and house, depending on the night. The acoustics of this grand building lend themselves perfectly to live music, and Koko has a policy of regularly showcasing regional upcoming talents. There really is something in store for everyone here, and this attracts a great mixed crowd.

Queen of Hoxton

"An Industry of Fun"

This modern bar and club is not only good for hanging out with friends, but also for business lunches. The Turkish Halloumi with vegetables and the Piri Piri Chicken with Saffron Cous Cous and Salad are some of the highlights from the menu. Captain haddock's grog, Stop the Pigeon and Don't Go to Dalston are a few quirky cocktails on offer. The Queen of Hoxton also functions as a club with both live performances as well as DJ music featured on its calendar, and so are a few art exhibitions.

Cargo

"Nightly Hang-out"

Cargo is one popular place to go for drinks, live music and an assortment of pub grub. The bar spouts heady potions to late-night birds and concert crowds who like to linger. The space under the viaduct is smartly refurbished to accommodate live acts and parties. Huevos rancheros, burgers, nachos, fish tacos and vegetarian empanadas, are dished around in the cafe along the street. The place is filled with thumping music mixed together by world renowned DJs like Ramshackle, Louise, Kash and others.
